CuratorJulie: Crucially, the audience has become more fractured and more niche that they have not let themselves enjoy their art in private. Robert: Our shows bring a different audience. The older audience in popkica houses is no longer softening. Julie: When we started our art programme in 2011 with a show about Leonardo da Vinci, we were completely unsure if the big screen could replicate as we walked through the gallery. But the audience didn't just want to see fine art, it wanted more. In the pictures, we make a slow contemplative camera maneuver. Robert: But it's not just for the older crowd; That's for anyone who's not going to the theater right now. In 2010, we recorded a concert of Metallica, Anrax, Megadeth and Slayer. I said to the director, Remember, you're shooting for the big screen - don't cut so fast. Leave the camera on the guitarist during the solo. The kids in the movies started swinging. They felt like they were really there. You'd be surprised how our way comes, which we say no to. As the delay in representing women in Hollywood continues to become an increasingly pivotal topic of discussion, IMDb has added an F rating that will help support feminist films. The feature ranks films by three criteria - whether the work was directed by a woman written by a woman or by a prominent woman on screen - meaning you now have a handy new guide to finding projects with less mansplaining and more complex female characters. But where exactly can you find IMDb's list of F-rated movies? From now on, the F rating seems to have no place on individual film pages, but it's new, so let's give them some update the system. Fortunately, there's a way to get it behind you while you wait. All you have to do is go to the search bar on the IMDb page, type F-rated, click on the same sentence under keywords and voila. You have a fresh list of women's titles for the marathon during the next women's night in. According to the BBC, the F rating was originally presented by Bath Film Festival director Holly Tarquini in 2014 and has since been accepted by more than 40 US cinemas and festivals. Ms Tarquini told the BBC she was impressed by the progress made by the review, but that she hoped it would one day be obsolete because women's representation would not be such a rarite. She said: It's exciting when new organisations [sic] decide to join us in highlighting the brilliant work that women do in film and how far the film industry lags behind most other industries when it comes to ensuring equal opportunities for women. Our real goal, however, is to reach the stage when the F rating is superfluous, because 50 per cent of the stories we see on screen tell and about the unfairly outrageous half of the population - women. IMDb tagged 21,800 F-rated films, while titles such as Bridget Jones's Baby, Frozen and American Honey were rated Triple F for writing, directing and directing a woman. It's about the triple threat. While this may seem like a simple change for some, it highlights a much broader problem. Women are not sufficiently represented in the film as they should be - on screen or off. In an ideal world, women would have a fair enough share in the film that an F rating would not be necessary at all, but unfortunately that is not the case. A recent report by the Center for the Study of Women in Television and Film at San Diego State University shows that we've really regressed instead of moving forward. It showed that in 2016, only 7 per cent of the 250 films in question were directed by women - a 2 per cent drop from last year's list, which broke the 1998 record as the highest percentage of female directors on the highest gross list. In fact, we have not made much progress in the last decade, let alone the last few years. Let's hope IMDb's new chart will encourage more filmmakers to push for this offensive F rating, and one day, just maybe, we won't need it anymore. Friends are one of the most popular sitcoms of all time and even now more than 15 years later, it still remains just as popular. That's because the six characters felt like family, and the jokes were made of solid gold. Times change, but Friends are funny forever. But every episode of the series isn't as funny as some of the top-rated efforts. In more than 10 seasons, Friends are on 236 total meals. Here are five of the best ever according to IMDb reviews. 5. The One with the Prom Video — Season 2, Episode 14 RELATED: 'Friends': The character 'Fat Monica' is one of the most controversial in the history of the series One of the most iconic From all times, Rachel has realized how much Ross has always loved her. In The One with the Prom Video, all six friends gather to watch an old video of Rachel and Monica getting ready for the prom. When Rachel's date hears her, Ross steps up to take her to the dance. But Rachel doesn't realize it. When Rachel's date Chip comes late, Rossa accidentally gets up and sadly accepts that he's not taking her to prom. But when Rachel sees the video years later, she frames the epic kiss on Ross, while Phoebe triumphantly calls, "See? He's her lobster, relying on how lobsters mate for life (though they don't really). 4th The Last One — Season 10, Episode 17 Chandler and Monica | David Hume Kennerly/Getty Images The series finale of Friends was shown on May 6, 2004, and turned to various events. After they were unable to have children, Monica and Chandler went to the hospital to adopt the child, but they found out that the adoptive mother had one child. Despise! Ross and Rachel sleep together to say goodbye to each other before going to Paris forever. Ross finally realizes he still loves her. Overall, the last season of Friends was not as popular as previous efforts, but the two-part finale received high marks. 3. The One with the Embryos — Season 4, Episode 12 You'd think that the most exciting aspect of The One with the Embryos Phoebe would agree to carry her brother's babies as a surrogate. But the tension is rising even higher as Ross designs a quiz for Chandler and Joey to play against Rachel and Monica. Over time, women become so confident that they bet their apartment, but Rachel loses the final question and loses. 2. The Last One: Part 2 — Season 10, Episode 18 The second part of the series finale shows Phoebe and Ross racing to the airport to stop Rachel from flying to Paris. When Monica and Chandler adjust to the concept of two babies instead of one, they pack up their apartment to move to the suburbs, officially ending the period. Joey buys his old roommate a girlfriend and a duke for old times. 1. The One Where Everybody Finds Out — Season 5, Episode 14 Chandler and Monica must have known that their relationship would not be able to hide forever. The One Where Everybody Finds Out is the top-rated episode of Friends on IMDb thanks to the classic line, They Don't Know That We Know. In the middle of the show, this episode is stupid and entertaining, reassuring and memorable. This is a perfect example of why friends are still so popular more than a decade later. Later.
